Fatah plans Land Day 'power' demos

By JON IMMANUEL

Fatah plans a series of marches and "powerful" demonstrations on Sunday's Land Day, which has been designated as "Palestine Day" in the West Bank and Gaza. This is to protest against Israeli government settlement and land expropriation policies, Fatah head Marwan Barghouti said yesterday. Land Day, observed since 1976 when six Israeli Arab villagers were shot by border policemen putting down a protest over expropriated land, has been a less important symbol to West Bank Palestinians. Protests this year may be synchronized, however, under the heading: "Settlements are terror."

Yesterday, Fatah and officials of the Palestinian Legislative Council political committee met to coordinate protest plans. They included Barghouti, Hassan Asfour (an Oslo negotiator), Ahmed Deik (son-in-law of Abu Jihad), and Nabil Amr, editor of Hayat al-Jadida, the newspaper closest to the Palestinian Authority.

Today, the Palestinian Legislative Council is to meet in Ramallah, but as of last night, the IDF refused to allow Gaza members to enter Israel to attend. "There is a closure, so no one leaves Gaza," the IDF spokesman said.

Barghouti said that at a meeting of 500 Fatah activists in Beit Sahur three days ago, "We called on the Palestinian Authority to stop coordination on security matters with Israel until it agrees to change its policies."

The PA, however, is continuing security coordination, although both PA and IDF officials have said that for the past three weeks or more it has been on a lower level of cooperation than before.

At the Beit Sahur meeting of Fatah area committees and the Higher Fatah Council, "about 30 percent" of the participants called for renewing the intifada and "a few voices" called for armed attacks in the West Bank, but the great majority opted for peaceful demonstrations, according to Nafez Rifai, a Bethlehem delegate to the Higher Fatah Council.

The more militant delegates came from among the local activists who led the intifada, while the more moderate elements were from the organized officials of Fatah, including those who came from Tunis and are more closely associated with the PA.

The Higher Council of 41 delegates made one concession to those calling for intifada by including in its final statement a call for a boycott of Israeli goods which could be replaced by local goods.

The definition of peaceful demonstrations apparently includes throwing stones and firebombs into the no-man's land between IDF and Palestinian Police forces in Bethlehem and Hebron. Palestinian policemen have restrained and pushed back stone-throwers who got close enough to IDF troops to hit them.

"I don't think that stones are violence," Barghouti was quoted as telling the Independent Media Review and Analysis in an inter-

Nature lovers ignore Green Line

By DAVID RUDGE

Despite recent tensions between Israel and the Palestinian Authority, a joint Israeli-Palestinian group aimed at preserving nature on both sides of the Green Line has recently been established under the motto "People to people - nature knows no boundaries."

The group, known as the Israeli-Palestinian Environment and Nature Protection Secretariat, is the brainchild of Yossi Leshem, former executive director of the Society for the Protection of Nature in Israel (SPNI).

Leshem said the project, which the Dutch government is helping to finance, is aimed at bringing people together and creating a better understanding through love of nature.

"The idea was born after I learned that Dr. Yair Hirschfeld, one of the architects of the Oslo Accords, was establishing an Israeli-Palestinian Economic Cooperation Foundation," said Leshem, who now lectures at Tel Aviv University while continuing to play an active role in SPNI.

"I suggested that the environment is also an economic issue and that we could organize outings for Palestinian and Israeli kids, take them on hikes and into the

Deputy Minister Peled charges: Arafat knew of World Trade Center plot

By STEVE RODAN

Israeli intelligence has evidence that Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat had prior knowledge of the successful 1993 plot to bomb New York City's World Trade Center, which killed six people, Deputy Education Minister Moshe Peled said last night.

"More than that, he was part of the discussions on the operation," Peled said. "I call on the prime minister to give the information to the Americans, so they'll know who they're dealing with."

Peled confirmed information relayed by intelligence sources that, several days before the February 26, 1993 bombing, Arafat met with Sudanese and Islamic terrorist leaders who discussed the plot.

The sources said Arafat was privy to the conspiracy, because of his close personal ties to Sudanese leader Hassan Turabi, head of the National Islamic Front. According to a US State Department report on terrorism, Turabi is a leading advocate of closer ties between terrorist groups and their government sponsors. He was also a leading figure in the Fatah-Hamas dialogue in 1995.

Two Sudanese diplomats were arrested and later deported in July of 1993, after US authorities directly linked them to the explosion at the World Trade Center and a plot to bomb the United Nations.

Israeli government spokesmen refused to comment on the intelligence reports or on Peled's call for Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to release them to the US. "I don't know anything about it," said David Bar-Ilan, director of communications and policy planning in the Prime Minister's Office.

A Defense Ministry spokesman also refused to comment.

But US and Israeli intelligence sources agree that Arafat continues to maintain a large number of Fatah guerrillas in bases in Sudan, 1,200 of whom arrived from that country in 1994 and now serve in the Palestinian security forces. One Israeli source said the number of Fatah guerrillas in Sudan is close to 3,000.

"Arafat continues to maintain a training base in Sudan and the Fatah people there and work closely with the regime and with Iran," said Yonah Alexander, a Pentagon consultant and director of the terrorism studies program at George Washington University. "If there hadn't been an agreement with Israel, then Fatah would definitely have been on the US list of terror organizations."

US Senator calls for suspension of aid to PA

By HILLEL KUTTLER

WASHINGTON — Senator Arlen Specter is calling for US aid to the Palestinians to be suspended until the administration determines whether the Palestinian Authority is complying with its commitment to fight terrorism.

Under US law and an amendment Specter authored in 1995, the administration's $500 million, five-year pledge for assistance is conditioned on its certifying that the PA is complying with its commitments under the Oslo accord.

In a letter to Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, Specter said that in light of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's charge that Arafat gave a "green light" to terrorist attacks, "it is very important" for the US to determine whether that is true.

Specter requested a prompt response so that it could be considered when the foreign aid bill is taken up by the appropriations subcommittee on which he sits. "My own view is his [Arafat's] performance is borderline and we've given him the benefit of the doubt because we don't want to rock the boat," Specter said.

Dagan: Terrorists may strike soon

By LIAT COLLINS and STEVE RODAN

Terrorists might strike again soon, Maj.-Gen. (res.) Meir Dagan, the prime minister's adviser on counterterrorism, warned at a briefing yesterday. He called for increased public alert against attempts to plant bombs or stage other attacks.

Dagan said the Palestinian Authority and its Islamic opposition plan to escalate the violence to coincide with next week's Land Day, the anniversary of 1976 clashes between Israeli Arabs and police in which six people were killed.

But Dagan stressed that he does not have concrete information of a terrorist plot to attack Israel. "If there was such concrete information, I wouldn't be here," he said. "We would be working on this."

Meanwhile, Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak told the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee yesterday that the "ground is more fertile for attacks," but security forces are prepared. Asked about the possibility a new intifada now that the Palestinians are armed, he told reporters: "Armed Palestinians is not intifada. It's war. Intifada is something else."

Most of the meeting revolved around the question of whether or not Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat had given terror groups a green light for violence. Labor Party leader Shimon Peres was particularly persistent in raising the issue.

According to an official briefing, Brig.-Gen. Amos Gilad, head of Military Intelligence's Research Division, told the committee that Israel has "no clear-cut evidence or information that Arafat had given the green light for terror, but his style, words, and body language were understood by terror groups to have given them the go-ahead."

Peres said it is important to know whether the green light was given, because the basic principle behind the Oslo Accords is that differences of opinion would be solved without violence.

Gilad said Jibril Rajoub, head of Palestinian Preventive Security, had sent out a message that Fatah must carry out violent activities to protest Har Homa. "There is no doubt he gave the green light to violence and made sure activities would take place in Hebron."

Gilad said no group had claimed responsibility for the Tel Aviv attack because it could complicate matters with and for Arafat.

(It was reported in the local media, including The Jerusalem Post, that Hamas claimed responsibility for the bombing in a phone call to Channel 1.)

Gilad said extremist feelings are running very high among the Fatah leadership on the ground.

Shahak told the committee that there are no concrete warnings of future attack, but they are likely. He said the situation could be changed "by dialogue at a high level."

He also said that during the Hebron rioting over the weekend the Palestinians were quick to get the youths out on the street to protest Har Homa but also quick to calm them down before it got out of hand.

Clashes continue in territories

By MARGOT DUDKEVITCH and HERB KEINON

Fierce clashes between Palestinians and IDF troops broke out in Bethlehem, Hebron, and other areas in the West Bank yesterday for the sixth straight day.

One border policeman and an IDF soldier were lightly wounded in yesterday's clashes, the IDF Spokesman said last night. The Border Police officer was hit by stones in Hebron and the IDF soldier was stoned in Bethlehem.

Shortly after declaring Rachel's Tomb open to worshippers at noon, the IDF was forced to evacuate them, after Palestinian youths, mainly from Bethlehem University, started throwing stones and bottles at troops posted nearby.

Soldiers fired rubber bullets and tear gas to disperse the rioters, the IDF Spokesman said, adding there were no injuries to the troops. Palestinians claimed that 27 were injured in the rioting, some from the rubber bullets.

Classes at Bethlehem University ended at noon with a call by the student council for all students to join a rally and march to Rachel's Tomb, which had just been reopened. Approaching the shrine, the students started pelting soldiers with stones and the IDF quickly ordered worshippers to leave the area. The clashes continued for several hours.

Col. Eliezer, commander of the Bethlehem area, warned yesterday the IDF would deal with violent protests more forcefully if need be.

Speaking to reporters while Palestinians were throwing dozens of rocks at the soldiers guarding Rachel's Tomb, Eliezer said the Palestinian forces were not doing all they could to stop the rioters. He said some 400 students were involved in yesterday's confrontation.

His demands to the Palestinian Authority to take a more forceful hand in putting down the protests have had to go through the DCO office, he said, since he has been unable to set up a meeting with his Palestinian counterpart.

"We are well prepared with a variety of different means," Eliezer said, refusing to spell out what weaponry the IDF has brought to the scene. He said that so far the IDF has reacted with a great deal of restraint.

The IDF Spokesman said calm was restored to the area around Rachel's Tomb by evening.

In Hebron, meanwhile, scores of Palestinians also pelted IDF troops with rocks and soldiers responded by firing rubber bullets into the crowd.

The rioting, said Hebron Jewish community spokesman Noam Armon, did not take place near the Jewish section. "It appears that the Palestinian Police is finally doing something," he said.

Yesterday afternoon, an Israeli driver was lightly injured near the Hussan near Bethlehem after his car was stoned. The IDF Spokesman announced. He was treated by IDF medics at the scene.

Outside nearby Beit Salm, IDF troops and Palestinian policemen dispersed a group of youths stoning vehicles on the road to Herodium.

Later in the afternoon, a Border Police patrol arrested three Palestinian youths who were throwing stones at cars near the A-Ram junction in northern Jerusalem for the second day. No injuries or damage were reported. Shortly afterward city police arrested three other Palestinian youths who were throwing stones near the Western Wall.

A firebomb was hurled at IDF troops on the Haholoh bypass road last night, the IDF Spokesman said. There were no injuries or damage.

Djerejian: Arafat must stop terror in word, deed

By STEVE RODAN

Palestinian Authority chief Yasser Arafat cannot continue peace negotiations while refusing to fight Palestinian terrorists intent on attacking Israel, a former senior US official said last night.

Edward Djerejian, US assistant secretary of state in the Bush administration, told The Jerusalem Post that Arafat must "assume all the responsibility on his part both in word and deed in preventing terrorism on the ground and make the 100 percent effort that the US is talking about."

"Certainly, the Palestinian leadership can't have it both ways," Djerejian, who now directs the James Baker Institute of Public Policy at Rice University, said. "It cannot not live up to its obligations to prevent terrorism and still at the same time pursue the peace process. There has to be a total living up to that commitment."

Djerejian, who is in Israel to attend conferences at Tel Aviv University and at the International Policy Institute for Counter-Terrorism, called on Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to refrain from changing the current situation in the territories and Jerusalem, particularly the construction of Har Homa, and begin negotiations on final status issues with the Palestinians. He warned that without progress in talks with the Palestinians "there will be a sharp deterioration in the situation."

He said that Arafat and Netanyahu have to decide whether the recently-signed Hebron accord is the end of the peace process, followed by violence, or a gateway to final status issues such as borders, Jerusalem, settlements and Palestinian refugees. "This is a truly, very fragile crossroads in the Palestinian negotiations," he said.

The former assistant secretary of state said despite the current tension, Arafat remains bound to the peace process. "I don't think that Arafat thinks or feels that he has any option but to pursue the peace process," he said. "He has much to gain and everything to lose."

PA blocks students from going to Joseph's Tomb

By MARGOT DUDKEVITCH

Palestinian Police last night prevented a group of yeshiva students returning to Joseph's Tomb from entering Nablus.

According to Yehuda Lieberman, who heads a Jewish group called "The Nablus Command," the IDF had said it would allow a small group of students to return to Joseph's Tomb yesterday afternoon.

Lieberman said, however, that when the bus transporting some 30 students, accompanied by IDF jeeps, reached the entrance to Nablus, the Palestinians refused to let it through. The bus was forced to turn back, but left a small group of yeshiva students in a van, surrounded by IDF troops, at the entrance to the city.

At this point OC Judea and Samaria Maj.-Gen. Gabi Ophir was asked to intervene, he said.

Ten days ago, fearing an eruption of violence as bulldozers started work on Har Homa, the IDF ordered the closure of Joseph's Tomb, demanding that yeshiva students from the Old Yosef Hai yeshiva and all worshippers and visitors leave the area.

Lieberman said that after a meeting with OC Central Command Maj.-Gen. Uzi Dayan last night, Ophir ordered all Israelis and yeshiva students to leave the entrance to Nablus, declaring it a closed military zone.

Late last night, the IDF Spokesman confirmed that Palestinian Police prevented a bus from entering Joseph's Tomb, stating that their reason for doing so was tension in the area and their belief that lives would be endangered.

Sharon hears Hebron settlers' complaints

By MARGOT DUDKEVITCH

National Infrastructure Minister Ariel Sharon paid a surprise visit to Hebron and Kiryat Arba yesterday afternoon. At Tel Rumeida, Sharon listened to Hebron Jewish community leaders, who informed him of the flagrant violations of the Hebron agreement by the Palestinians.

According to Hebron community spokesman Noam Armon, the issues raised included the building freeze. "We cannot build one home or even a room," said Armon. In addition, the settlers spoke about the Palestinian Police and rioters who entered deep into the H2 areas.

Armon said the number of Palestinian policemen was also in violation of the agreement, stating that "instead of 400 there are at least 1,500."

They also raised the fact that they are prevented from guarding the ancient Jewish cemetery, where gravestones were recently desecrated.

Sharon said he believes Arabs and Jews can live together in Hebron, but the Arabs must recognize that there will always be a Jewish presence there and honor the agreement, according to his spokesman Ranan Gissis.

Sharon, who wrote down the objections after listening to the settlers, promised to inform the government.

Also in Hebron yesterday was Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's policy planning aide David Bar-Ilan.

Meanwhile, before attending the Knesset Foreign Affairs and Defense Committee session, Chief of General Staff Lt.-Gen. Amnon Lipkin-Shahak, accompanied by OC Central Command Maj.-Gen. Uzi Dayan and OC Judea and Samaria Maj.-Gen. Gabi Ofir, visited the H2 area in Hebron and spoke with troops stationed there.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

On the streets of Bethlehem

By HERB KEINON

A Palestinian named Yasser was painstakingly placing white Jerusalem stone on the facade of a new wall protecting Rachel's Tomb yesterday, even as his compatriots were throwing bottles and rocks at IDF troops guarding the site.

"What can I do, I have to eat," Yasser said, not fazed in the least by the odd spectacle — his building a wall to protect the tomb while Palestinian rioters were throwing rocks in its direction, seemingly determined to damage it.

Yasser wasn't interested in talking much, nor in giving his full name. He lives in Bethlehem, and fortifying the tomb can't at this time be one of the city's favored ways of making a living.

The foreman of the Palestinian work crew building the wall was more expansive. "I have 10 children," he said. "I have to feed them. That is the main thing."

The foreman pointed at the scene unfolding down the street — rioters running into the street, throwing rocks, and darting to the other side for safety; tear gas falling from the sky like smoky white snakes. "I have my profession," he said, "they (the rioters) have theirs." Some profession.

The image of Palestinians throwing rocks and bottles in the direction of Rachel's tomb brought to mind Jewish cemetery desecrations in places like Poland. Obviously there are major differences, but there are also similarities; namely, where there are no Jews, attack the Jewish tombs.

Pundits have been trying for days to define what is happening in Hebron and Bethlehem. Is it the beginning of what will turn into an armed revolt? Is it just the venting of steam? Is it the intifada? One thing for sure, the intifada — at least an intifada along the lines of the late 1980s — is not what has emerged in the last few days. And not only because at the end of the day it has been red-bettered Palestinian security forces who have broken up the rioting, both in Bethlehem and in Hebron. It isn't the intifada because there are no IDF troops patrolling the city to hurl rocks and concrete blocks on, no civilian cars to stone on their way to nearby settlements.

For an intifada, you need Jews. Without Jews patrolling or driving through Palestinian areas, to attack them one has to go to their cities — blow up buses and cafes, kill women and injure babies. But then it becomes terror — pure and simple; something much more difficult to clothe in a romantic mantle and call intifada.

The rioting in Bethlehem yesterday lasted for some five hours, from the time Bethlehem University let its students out at 12:30 p.m. to the time when the Palestinian security forces decided to seriously stop the action at about five.

For those five hours the scene was hard to place — like stumbling onto a movie set. There were angry shouts, the blast from tear-gas launchers, the ping of rocks hitting lamp posts, the pop of rubber bullets being fired, and the wail of sirens — but not sirens one hears on Israeli streets, sirens that sound foreign, from Albania, maybe Bosnia. The movie-set quality of the whole scene was due to its proximity to Jerusalem, just five minutes from Gilo. Scenes like this are not supposed to be so close — unless they are staged to film movies.

The IDF has for the last few days intermittently declared Rachel's Tomb a closed military zone, but yesterday morning — for a few hours — allowed people to come to pray. When in the afternoon the IDF Spokesman said that the site was again closed, and the worshippers were removed, he was talking about two people, Haim Vaknin who is the custodian of the site, and one other man. Vaknin, who has been in charge of the site for the last 17 years, said hardly anyone came to Rachel's tomb in the morning — neither tourists nor haredim, the site's usual clientele. There were Jewish groups who would have liked to come to the tomb to prove a point, but Vaknin asked them not to. "This isn't the right time," he said.

view. "It is peaceful to throw stones."

However, no one at the Beit Sahur conference supported attacks inside Israel. "We are absolutely against the attacks," said Barghouti.

Rifai, who is on a daily vigil near Har Homa, said, "I condemn what happened in Tel Aviv. I think this is the hardest of all bulldozers. But mad decisions by Netanyahu make Palestinians frustrated."

Nevertheless, there is growing coordination and cooperation with Hamas, and Fatah called for more coordination with opposition groups. The idea is to get Hamas to work within a Fatah framework of protests. "For example, we participate with Hamas in marches," Barghouti said.

field, and the idea took root."

He said the idea is to establish a joint center, probably based in Jerusalem, with a Palestinian chairman and an Israeli director-general, create cooperative projects and establish SPNI-style field schools in the West Bank and Gaza.

One project has already gotten under way, with the aid of Imad Atrash of Beit Sahur.

"We intend to hold a summer camp for Israeli and Palestinian kids on the subject of nature conservation and dealing with the environment," said Leshem.

The joint project is scheduled to be discussed at tomorrow's annual outing of over 10,000 Israeli Arab schoolchildren on Mt. Carmel, under the auspices of SPNI and the Education Ministry.

ARAFAT

But a US counterterrorism official disputed the claim and said Israeli officials might be confusing Fatah with Abu Nidal's Fatah Revolutionary Council, which trains in Sudan.

"There's no doubt there are terrorist groups training in Sudan, but [Fatah] isn't one of them," he said.

US counterterrorism officials have "never heard any report of Fatah" training there, he said. He also stated that "there's been no indication of that kind of Sudan connection" to the World Trade Center bombing.

At one of the Sudanese camps, Kadru north of Khartoum, Iranian experts trained terrorists, including Fatah forces headed by Jaber Amer, as commanders, intelligence operatives, and bombmakers, according to the sources.

A US congressional investigator with close ties to Israeli officials said Hamas and Fatah have training camps in Sudan. "They work together," he said. "Arafat has strategic ties with Turabi and he has exploited them in order to forge cooperation with Hamas." But the investigator said although he has heard of reports that Arafat knew of the World Trade Center bombing plot, and was said to have even praised the idea, he is skeptical of the veracity of the information. "I have yet to be convinced," he said.

US State Department officials said the PLO has not authorized any terrorist attacks since Arafat signed the Declaration of Principles with Israel in September 1993. One official who works on the State Department's report on global terrorism said he does not know of any Fatah bases in Sudan.

In another development, Israeli officials said the Clinton administration has quietly dropped its dispute of Israel's assertion that Arafat has allowed the Islamic opposition groups to resume terrorist attacks on Israel.

Hillel Kuttler contributed to this report.

Netanyahu, Peres deny unity government deal

By SARAH HONIG

Categorical denials that the establishment of a national unity government is imminent and that the portfolios have already been allocated were issued yesterday from both the offices of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Labor leader Shimon Peres.

The political rumor mill began furiously regarding the national unity story yesterday in the wake of a front-page report in Yedioth Aharonot which claimed that Netanyahu had already agreed to set up a unity coalition and that he and Peres had reached an accord whereby each of the large parties would get six portfolios in the new government, with the remaining six portfolios to stay in the hands of the present government's smaller coalition partners.

The report also claimed that Peres would be awarded the finance portfolio from Dan Meridor while Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai would lose his portfolio to Labor's Ehud Barak. Four other Likud ministers would also have to relinquish their seats around the cabinet table but Foreign Minister David Levy would be immune from any reshuffle. Yisrael Ba'Aliya would lose one of its portfolios, the Third Way would retain a cabinet portfolio and United Torah Judaism would not retain exclusive control of the Housing Ministry either, according to this scenario.

Netanyahu's spokesman Shai Bazak was quick to issue a denial saying that "the prime minister had not decided to set up a national unity government and hence all the talk about portfolio allocation is nothing more than journalistic speculation." A denial in a similar vein later followed from Peres, who said that the latest reports "are thoroughly untrue and without any foundation whatsoever. These aren't serious reports but ludicrous fabrications."

Netanyahu also called Mordechai last night to deny the report that he would lose the Defense Ministry portfolio.

Peres left last night for Thailand, and the view in Labor is that his absence is likely to put a temporary halt to the national unity speculation.

Agriculture Minister Rafael Eitan,

Tourism Minister Moshe Katsav and Health Minister Yehoshua Matza all came out yesterday in favor of a national unity government under certain conditions. Eitan argued that "it's good for the country to have as broad a coalition as possible, but not if it becomes a platform for internal squabbles and national paralysis."

Katsav said he would support national unity "on condition that common ground can be found on such questions as the goals for the final status talks, Jerusalem, and the Golan. If a broad coalition can function harmoniously with broad consensus, then it might be something we should give serious consideration to."

Matza, slated to be one of those who may be ejected from a broad coalition, said: "Perhaps a unity government is possible if Oslo's architects agree that we cannot do business with the two-faced Arafat."

However, the NRP came out against any talk of national unity yesterday. NRP secretary-general Zevulun Orlev issued an official statement asserting that "the results of the last elections clearly indicate that the nation does not want Labor in power this term. The results mandated a homogenous right of center coalition...The prime minister mustn't forget who brought him to power. The NRP will consider a deal with Labor behind its back a betrayal."

Interior Minister Eli Shas of Shas declared: "I am not bothered by this whole question of national unity because I am not threatened myself and no one will take any portfolios from Shas."

Support for national unity came from one unlikely source yesterday. Meretz MK Avraham Poraz, unlike his fellow faction members, welcomed the notion of "rescuing Netanyahu from the grip of the extreme Right and the religious elements, to which Netanyahu keeps capitulating... Otherwise he would have never sanctioned the Har Homa construction."

At its weekly meeting yesterday, however, the Meretz faction expressed its strong opposition to a unity government. Meretz called on Labor to stand together as a clear, outside alternative to "this scary government."

Unity government not around the corner

By SARAH HONIG

It is axiomatic in the political arena that a national unity coalition could be personally advantageous to Labor Party leader Shimon Peres and in some ways help Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.

Peres would be able to enter the government as Labor's senior minister and remain so until the year 2000, no matter who is elected Labor chairman in his stead on June 3. Netanyahu would have a freer hand in charting Israel's foreign and defense policy if he did not have a hostile opposition snapping at his heels and if he could be assured of a near-national consensus.

But does this make it inevitable that the formation of a broad coalition is around the corner or even feasible? Not necessarily. The big question is whether Netanyahu and Peres can translate interests into action. Right now this is more difficult than in any national unity precedent.

With one exception, all the rest were formed at the beginning of the government's term of office, soon after elections and not after the portfolios had already been allocated. To do so in mid-term would make it necessary for Netanyahu to sack some of his ministers. He may thus get rid of foes and competitors like Finance Minister Dan Meridor and Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai, but he would also have to ditch some of his most loyal supporters.

The outcry would shake the Likud to its very foundations and could be politically suicidal even for a directly elected premier. It would be equally wrenching to ask other coalition parties to yield portfolios and clout - even if they now claim to support national unity. Such unity may be a popular cause, but many of its boosters expect it not to happen or to happen at someone else's expense.

The 1967 example in which Menachem Begin entered the Levi Eshkol government without demanding portfolios is very unlikely to be repeated. Labor will exact a heavy price in ministerial appointments if Peres is to ever convince fellow Laborites to follow him into the coalition.

At this point it is highly doubtful whether he can pull this off despite the urgency inherent in the fact that June 3 is less than three months away. Labor cynics, however, say that if the spoils are lucrative enough, Peres could sway even his most ardent opponent, would-be Labor leader Ehud Barak. If the defense portfolio were offered him, Barak would find the justification to serve under Netanyahu, they say.

Likud cynics counter with the question of whether it would suit Netanyahu to build up his rival in the next elections by placing him in a prestigious cabinet seat and allowing him to claim that Netanyahu could not hack it alone. Moreover, Netanyahu would be jeopardizing his support in the religious and right-wing parties if he is seen by them as betraying the cause. This would be tantamount to handing Barak the premiership next time around, those close to Netanyahu say.

The idea of each large party coming away with six portfolios and six being left in the hands of present coalition partners is sure to result in an unwieldy and unstable government. The small parties would be even more powerful than now, because they would become the pivotal balance in any cabinet vote. The prime minister would be left in an untenable situation in which he could not count on a cabinet majority for any move and Peres would be accused of moving into a government in which theoretically the Right has a majority.

And all this can happen only after the Bar-On Affair is over. No one knows when that will be and whether the government will emerge unscathed. The present phase may be followed by numerous petitions to the High Court, which could make it all the more difficult for Peres to talk friends and foes alike into helping him beat the June deadline.

Most courteous MK

MK Ori Orr (Labor) is presented the Jerusalem Journalists Association's Itamar Ben-Avi Award by Ben-Avi's daughter, Rina Raz, in a ceremony at the Knesset yesterday. Orr was voted by parliamentary reporters "the most courteous MK." He said he hopes to persuade others both in and outside the House to follow his example and act with patience and tolerance. (Note: Lisa Collins; Photo: Isaac Harari)

Kahalani: A-G okays Palestinian office closures

By BAT SHEVA TSUR

Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani said yesterday Attorney-General Elyakim Rubinstein had determined that an unspecified number of Palestinian institutions operating in Jerusalem could be closed because political activities on behalf of the Palestinian Authority were being conducted at them.

But, Kahalani added, the attorney-general had given a legal opinion and it was up to him, as minister, to make a political decision on the issue. "I am still considering it," Kahalani told members of the Knesset Law Committee yesterday.

"There are many considerations other than the legal ones," Kahalani said.

The minister came under fire from his coalition partners. "Nothing is worse than a double message," said Ruby Rivlin (Likud). Ze'ev Begin (Likud) added: "If you try to close four institutions and then end up maybe closing two, you are indicating to the others that their activities are kosher."

Asked whether the prime minister was party to the decision, Kahalani replied: "It is up to the minister in charge." As for the affidavits presented by the PA stating there was no political activity in its institutions in Jerusalem, Kahalani said: "I believe 50% of them are untrue."

"The government took a decision on 11 March to shut down four such institutions," said MK Moshe Shahal (Labor) who requested the meeting, but it appeared that "this is a government which declares one thing and does the opposite." He said that the previous government had decided not to take action against Palestinian institutions unless it was convinced that the action could stand up in court in the event of a petition to the High Court of Justice.

Kahalani said that the Palestinians had now taken a decision to fight for Jerusalem as their capital. "We now have to fight an open war to keep Jerusalem as our undivided capital," he said. "We have drawn up a long-term plan in which we will invest huge sums." He said that "the Har Homa issue is part of the overall unified Jerusalem plan."

Kahalani warned the PLO that action would be taken against it because of its part in the current unrest. "There are PLO institutions which we have not taken action against," Kahalani said. "Now the PLO is active in the disturbances and we have to consider whether to close its institutions in Jerusalem." Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert said that there was anti-Israel political activity in other parts of eastern Jerusalem too, noting the atmosphere in Arabic-language schools in the capital and the constant ferment on the Temple Mount.

PM willing to meet Arafat

By MICHAEL YUDELMAN

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu will not object to a meeting with Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat, if he asks for one, but will insist the meeting focus on his obligation to fight against terrorism, sources said yesterday.

However, the sources said, no such meeting has been scheduled and no contacts to schedule one have been made by the Palestinians, despite Arafat's statement that he is ready for a meeting. "We never objected to having the meeting, it was Arafat who evaded it," one source said.

Netanyahu yesterday reiterated his proposal to move directly to final status talks, "which is the best way to deal with the really tough problems and find the common denominator."

Speaking at a police award ceremony, he noted that "the time and effort we expend on the details of the interim agreement seem increasingly redundant, compared to the time and effort we could invest in the permanent settlement, and they're not building mutual confidence, either."

He added: "There is only one way to get out of the present crisis. The Palestinian Authority must understand that first it must do what it has undertaken to do in the agreement, and do what any authority and government which respects itself does - fight terrorism to the end."

He said the PA did fight terrorism to a considerable extent during the past year, and it can do so now.

Police crack down on car theft

Police completed a special project to catch car thieves and retrieve stolen car parts on Monday, Judea and Samaria Police District spokesman Opher Sivan yesterday.

During Operation On Wheels, which lasted for a week, Sivan said police checked over 3,400 passengers and 2,200 vehicles. Six stolen cars were discovered, four in Judea and Samaria and two in the Jordan Valley, he said. In addition police made 12 arrests, and four people were held for investigation.

Among those arrested, said Sivan, were a truck driver found hiding stolen car parts and a stolen car. He added police were able to contact the car's owners. Two car thieves were caught while stealing a car in Jerusalem, he said. Margot Dudkevitch

Phosphoric acid leaks from Negev train wreck

A freight train derailed in the Negev yesterday and two of its tank cars overturned, leaking poisonous phosphoric acid. Firefighters and railroad maintenance workers handled the leak, which was not considered dangerous to the public, since the accident occurred shortly after the 25-car-long train left the Rotem plant in Mishor Rotem, an unpopulated area. A second engine was sent to bring the 21 cars that did not derail back to the plant, and a crane was summoned to get the remaining cars and engine back on the track after the phosphoric acid leak was plugged. Tim

Swiss Holocaust fund given another SFr 20m.

Swiss banks have pledged another SFr 20 million to the Holocaust humanitarian fund, bringing the fund to SFr 285m., the Swiss Bankers Association said yesterday. The humanitarian fund, which is to benefit needy Jewish and non-Jewish victims of the Holocaust, will be administered by a seven-member Jewish-Swiss executive, which will determine the criteria for need. It is understood that special consideration will be given to survivors in Eastern Europe who have not been eligible for the German reparations programs. Marilyn Henry

Israel Prize for Journalism announced

Education and Culture Minister Zevulun Hammer yesterday announced that the Israel Prize for Journalism will be awarded this year to Shmuel Schnitzer (print), Haim Yavin (broadcasting) and David Rubinger (photography). Hammer informed all three by telephone. The awards committee noted that Schnitzer worked his way up from a beat reporter to the chief editor of Ma'ariv; Yavin's career has spanned nearly three decades at Israel Television, where he still serves as chief anchor of Channel 1's nightly news; and Rubinger has covered most of Israel's history as a press photographer since 1947. The prizes will be awarded at the annual ceremony at the end of Independence Day in Jerusalem. Tim

Oppenheim painting discovered by accident

A painting by Moritz Oppenheim (1800-1882), the first important Jewish painter of the modern era, was recently discovered by accident in Tel Aviv. A woman discovered the small oil painting (20 cm. x 16.5 cm.) between the pages of a book belonging to her late husband, who had fled Berlin in 1939. She brought it to Sotheby's for appraisal, thinking it might be worth several hundred dollars.

Sotheby expert David Breyer Weil said it reminded him of Oppenheim's work and, upon closer examination with a magnifying glass, discovered Oppenheim's initials on the painting. He valued it at $40,000-$60,000. Tim

Channel 2 now on satellite

Those with satellite dishes can now get Channel 2 via the Intelsat and Amos satellites. Focus on 11598 MHz at azimuth 236.8 degrees, 34 degrees up, and 4 degrees west (Amos) or 11017 MHz for Intelsat. The service started Monday and the Second Television & Radio Authority says that this is an interim solution until a contract is signed with one or the other of the two satellites. Helen Kaye

3 suspects released in TA bomb probe

By DAVID RUDGE and RAINE MARCUS

Three Israeli Arabs arrested on suspicion of having aided the Tel Aviv cafe suicide bomber were released yesterday after inquiries showed they were not involved.

The three, all residents of Umm el-Fahm, were arrested on Saturday night after a note with their names on it was found on the remains of the bomber.

Marwah Mahajneh, 45, his son Sa'id, 20, who are in the poultry business, and Salim Jabarin, 21, a construction worker, all said they had business dealings with the brother of the bomber and also knew members of his family, which was probably how he had the card with their names on it.

The three were remanded for nine days on Sunday by Peiah Tikva Magistrate's Court after police submitted a confidential report allegedly indicating their involvement with the bomber.

Mahajneh told the court that he had been at home and later travelled to Moshav Beit Yehoshua, while his son had been delivering chickens to Samaria at the time of the attack. Jabarin said he had been working at a construction site in Netanya. They were released after police checked their alibis.

Meanwhile, police are continuing to patrol areas in which Arabs illegally live from the territories are known to be living. Since last Friday's attack Tel Aviv police have continuously conducted spot checks for those illegally working or staying here.

Over these past two days Rehovot police have arrested 11 Arabs illegally in the city. They were employed in markets and at building sites. Three employers in Yavne and Rehovot were arrested on suspicion of illegally hiring workers.

Meanwhile, the police special operations division is preparing new plans to crack down on illegal workers and those employing them. In 1996, 1,800 criminal files were opened against such employers.

Israel protests Ashrawi speech in Geneva

By URIEL HEILMAN

Israel has slammed the UN Commission on Human Rights for allowing Palestinian representative Hanan Ashrawi to address the group in Geneva last week.

Citing Friday's breach in protocol that allowed Ashrawi, a member of the Palestinian observer delegation, to speak from the podium, a practice reserved only for officials of "existing states," Israeli representative Yosef Lamdan said that the commission's decision to set such a precedent was regrettable in light of Friday's terrorist attack in Tel Aviv and the recent blood-lily accusation levelled against Israel by Palestinian representative Nabil Ramlawi.

In the speech she made just hours after the terrorist attack in Tel Aviv's Apropo cafe, Ashrawi declared that Israeli bulldozers were burying the peace process. Protesting the decision that allowed Ashrawi to speak, Lamdan requested that the commission reconsider her participation in the proceedings in a letter to Miroslav Somol of the Czech Republic, chairman of the 53rd session of the UN Commission on Human Rights.

Somol, in a letter of response to Lamdan, condemned Ramlawi's recent accusation that Israeli authorities "infected by injection 300 Palestinian children with the HIV virus during the years of the intifada" and expressed his conviction that such racist and discriminatory sentiments would not be tolerated in the commission. The chairman also agreed to circulate Lamdan's letter and his own response as official documents of the commission.

Christian Solidarity representative David Litman urged Somol to follow up on his promise to act against the "mendacious and racist allegations" of the Palestinian representative.

Tensions between Israelis and Palestinians at the commission in Geneva have been high since the beginning of construction at the Har Homa site in Jerusalem.

Parents group official: Guides call shots on school trips

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN

Guides in charge of school trips who make last-minute changes in approved routes are rarely questioned about such changes, an Israel Parents Association official yesterday told the Presser Commission, which is investigating the attack by a Jordanian soldier at Naharayim which claimed the lives of seven eighth-grade girls on March 13.

Moshe Sheinfeld, who heads the trips committee for the association, said after testifying before the commission that the guide on such trips is "the ultimate authority," and if he decides to take the pupils to a different site than that for which there is a permit, "no one will argue with him." Teachers and parents, he said, are busy dealing with the children, and rarely question such decisions.

Sheinfeld said that this was the flaw in existing rules for such trips that would allow a tragedy like that which occurred at Naharayim to happen.

"If a guide says to the group: 'There's a beautiful waterfall over there,' and wants to go to it, even though it's not on the original permit, no one will say anything. In 99.9 percent of the cases, the class will go, enjoy it, and that's the end of it. No one will check if it's allowed or not," he said. Changes in the weather might also lead to guides changing trip routes, he said.

In the case of Naharayim, Sheinfeld told the commission, police there were also not informed that the Jordanian site was off-limits, which is why no one stopped the AMIT Furst School group or dozens of others like it that visited there.

Sheinfeld said there is hardly any checking up of such trips, adding it was too bad that "only after something like this happens, does everyone wake up."

He added that he personally had never seen any Education Ministry documents barring trips to Naharayim, although he agreed that there may be confusion over which parts of the site were or were not off-limits to school trips.

Today, commission members are due to visit Beit Shmesh to continue the investigation.

Meanwhile, Maya Shmuel, the schoolgirl who was seriously wounded in the Naharayim attack, was released yesterday from Hadassah-University Hospital in Jerusalem's Ein Kerem. Hila Ivri, also wounded in the attack, remains in Hadassah after being transferred from Poria Hospital near Tiberias.

Na'amat: State should help pay for child-care

By ESTHER HECHT

Unlike working mothers in the US, women here have never been able to deduct child-care expenses from their taxable income. On the contrary, recent legislation here increased working women's taxes.

To rectify the situation, Na'amat, the working women's organization, launched a campaign yesterday to get the state to carry part of working parents' child-care costs.

In the first stage, Na'amat is proposing a change in the National Insurance Institute Law that would give parents who work outside their homes a monthly stipend for care of children up to six years of age. The stipend would be NIS 282 for the first child and NIS 141 for each additional child, in addition to any other benefits to which working parents are entitled.

According to a study prepared for Na'amat, this compensation would enable as many as 75,000 women to enter the work force, adding as much as NIS 11.3 billion to the GNP and NIS 1.1 billion to tax revenues.

A public opinion survey commissioned by Na'amat showed that 84 percent of women with children under four years of age believe the proposal would encourage more women to go out to work.

Kostner spared death penalty

By MARILYN HENRY

NEW YORK — A New Jersey jury has spared the life of Avi Kostner, who pleaded guilty to murdering his two children, because, he said, he could not bear his former wife's not raising them as Jews.

The jury, after 11 hours of deliberations over three days, on Monday night said it was deadlocked over whether to impose the death penalty.

Kostner, who faced death by lethal injection, is expected to be sentenced to life in prison on May 16.

In a dramatic courtroom appearance two weeks ago, Kostner angrily asked for the death penalty.

Kostner pleaded guilty to drugging and suffocating Geri Beth, 12, and Ryan, 10, on June 26, 1994, days before they were to move to Florida from Teaneck, New Jersey.

The jury was split between those who viewed Kostner, 52, as a vengeful man who wanted to spite his wife and those who thought his actions resulted from an abusive childhood and a history of mental illness, according to yesterday's editions of the local newspaper, The Bergen Record.

Avi Kostner

Both Kostner and his ex-wife, Lynn Mison, have assailed the Family Court, where the couple waged a 7-year custody battle. The divorce decree called for the children to worship with both parents and to make their own decision about religion when they turned 16. Mison had converted to Judaism after her marriage to Kostner in 1979, but reverted to Christianity after the couple separated in 1986.

Chronically unemployed and once referred to as a "shleht schnorrer," Kostner suffered from decades of mental illness. Nonetheless, he was active in the local Orthodox community.

Kostner also was well-versed in Jewish tradition and history, which he invoked in an agitated statement to the court during the penalty phase of his trial.

"I am not the first father in history to kill his children to prevent conversion," he said. "I could not allow their Jewish souls to be cut off from Judaism. It is within Jewish history, during the Crusades, the inquisition — fathers killed their own children to prevent them from being converted."

Wingate memorial set for today

By DAVID RUDGE

The annual memorial service to mark the anniversary of the death of Orde Wingate, the British officer who helped lay the foundations for the formation of the IDF, is to be held today, for the first time, at Yemin Orde, the youth village on Mt. Carmel which is named after him.

Wingate, a devout Christian, was a fearless fighter and renowned military tactician, who fervently believed in the return of Jews to their historic homeland and the rebirth of the State of Israel.

"Maj.-Gen. Orde Wingate, who died in a plane crash in Burma in 1944, was known as 'The Friend' of Israel and was in fact one of the founding fathers of what today is the IDF," said Dr. Chaim Peri, director of Yemin Orde.

Orde Wingate

He noted that part of the educational curriculum at the village, which was last year presented with the prime minister's "Defender of the Child" award, is dedicated to Wingate's heritage.

More than 1,000 people, including members of the Jewish War Veterans of the US, British and Commonwealth war veterans, IDF officers and soldiers, the military attaches of several countries, government officials, and children from the youth village, are to take part in the memorial.

A letter sent by late British prime minister Winston Churchill to Wingate's widow Lorna to mark the official opening of Yemin Orde in 1953 will be read out during the ceremony.

Part of Churchill's letter reads: "I am delighted to know that there stands on Mt. Carmel a monument to the friendship which should always unite Great Britain and Israel."

C'tee presses for reparations for Bulgarian Jewish survivors

By ARYEH DEAN COHEN

Knesset Immigration and Absorption Committee chairman Naomí Blumenthal yesterday called on the German government to amend the criteria for awarding reparations to Holocaust survivors to include those who lived in Nazi-created ghettos that were not walled in.

Blumenthal made the demand to amend the "absurd" situation after hearing from survivors from Bulgaria who said they had been denied reparations because their ghettos were not enclosed by walls.

Blumenthal said she would appeal to Prime Minister Ezer Weizman and Foreign Minister David Levy to pressure the German government in this regard, and would also appeal directly to German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

Germany's ambassador to Israel told the committee that his government is aware of the problems within the reparation system, and said a new DM 80 million fund had been established to provide reparations to survivors from Eastern Europe, which may be able to pay survivors from Bulgaria.

Suzana Konort, a survivor from Bulgaria, said that it is imperative that something be done on their behalf, as "we have suffered enough, and we must not be seen as beggars."

The Lubotsky compromise

The main subject of the last cabinet meeting was not the deadlock with the Palestinians or the threat of terrorism. When the bomb went off in a Tel Aviv cafe on Friday, the cabinet was not addressing threats to Israel, but to the governing coalition of Binyamin Netanyahu. The topic was the Conversion Law that is being put forward by the religious parties.

For a long time now, the status quo on conversions has been a delicate and quirky compromise: Non-Orthodox conversions performed abroad are recognized for legal purposes here, while the same conversions performed in Israel are not. Neither side has been happy with this situation, but an uneasy peace has persisted.

This peace was destabilized when the Supreme Court ruled that the Interior Ministry did not have any legal basis for its practice of not recognizing, for legal purposes, Reform and Conservative conversions performed in Israel. The practice was not struck down by the court, but the court decision left the current practice vulnerable to legal challenge from the Reform and Conservative movements. The religious parties have since been trying to pass a law that would protect the status quo from pending legal challenges, and perhaps even push the status quo in the other direction by making it more difficult for Diaspora conversions to be recognized.

Though the cabinet approved a version of the Conversion Law at its meeting, the law should not be brought to the Knesset floor before Third Way MK Alex Lubotsky has a chance to persuade both sides to accept his compromise proposal instead.

Lubotsky's compromise is so straightforward and sensible that it renews one's faith in the ability of the political process actually to come up with solutions to problems, rather than making them worse. His proposal is for the Reform and Conservative movements to drop their court cases and for the Orthodox parties to drop their proposed legislation. That way, the status quo would be maintained exactly while a more permanent solution could be worked out.

The strange thing about this fight is that it is not so much between two political forces within Israel as between the Israeli religious parties and the leadership of Reform and Conservative Jewry in America. The pawns in this transatlantic battle of the titans are the tens of thousands of non-Jewish immigrants to Israel who would like to convert, but who are not willing or able to meet current Orthodox conversion requirements.

The battle cry of the Orthodox establishment is that an "epidemic" of non-Orthodox conversions is threatening to split the Jewish people. The Orthodox nightmare scenario is a situation in which a major portion of Diaspora Jewry is not recognized by them as Jews because they were not halachically converted, or are descendants of "non-Jews." There is certainly room for concern on this score, but the solution is not for Israeli Orthodoxy to wage a fruitless battle to delegitimize non-Orthodox Judaism in America. Even if the religious parties were to tear up the status quo and eliminate the recognition of foreign non-Orthodox conversions — an option that fortunately is not in the cards — they would not make a serious dent in what they claim to be an existential crisis for the Jewish people. The numbers of non-Orthodox conversions would continue to grow, and the split that the Orthodox fear would worsen.

The pursuit of the Conversion Law may be good politics for the religious parties, but it can only distract from, and perhaps even threaten, the pursuit of real solutions to the problem. At the end of the day, the only solution is for the major strands of Judaism to agree on a conversion process that they all can live with. This is not as impossible as it may seem from the perspective of either end of the religious spectrum. It will, however, entail compromise by both sides.

The non-Orthodox movements may have to tolerate a solution that, on the issue of conversion, does not treat their rabbis with complete equality and symmetry in comparison with their Orthodox colleagues. The Orthodox, in turn, will have to modify their current interpretation of the halachic requirements for conversion, in favor of more lenient — but equally valid — interpretations that were followed at other points in Jewish history.

The Lubotsky proposal is a reasonable one, as is a related proposal by Meretz MK Dedi Zucker to remove the nationality designation from the identity cards carried by all Israeli citizens. When asked in the Knesset about the Zucker proposal, Interior Minister Eli Suissa pledged to consider it seriously.

It makes sense to eliminate the designation from the document which is offensive to those who are against discrimination between Jews and non-Jews, and to those who believe the state has no say in determining who is a Jew.

For any of these proposals to go anywhere, however, there has to be a modicum of good will, mutual respect, and recognition that all the parties share a sincere desire for what is best for the Jewish people as a whole. The place to resolve family feuds is not in the courtroom or in the legislature, but in direct discussion with open ears and the shared goal of the unity of the Jewish people in mind.

Coalition of the sane

Friday's killing in Tel Aviv brought the political process in the region to a new low.

We look around us — at the massacre at Naharayim, at the Egyptian media — and ask ourselves: Must we go on? Can we go on?

At difficult moments like these, there are always those who condemn us for our naivete.

"We told you that there's no one to talk to," they say, "that peace here is an impossibility, in this generation, at any rate — maybe forever."

Always, at moments like these, there are those who call for stopping the talks, as if there was no greater way than this to punish the other side.

At moments like these, confronted by senseless killing, by bleeding babies, it's hard to talk logically, or say anything constructive.

All you really want to do is cry out and punch someone, and ask: What kind of "Allah akbar" wants to see a young man sent out to commit suicide in order to kill young women and maim babies?

We can cry, and we have to be angry; but these are reactions, not answers.

The answers don't lie in halting the process, because that would only signify the cessation of hope, and punish ourselves. And it wouldn't stop terrorism, which, after all, didn't begin with the peace process.

The answer is quite the opposite. It is precisely completion of the process that will deal the hardest blow to terror, perhaps the deathblow.

We have come a long way since 1978, when it all began at Camp David. For my generation, who saw Gamal Abdel Nasser, the Jordanian army, and Ahmed Shukeiry as villains, the Israeli flag in embassies in Cairo and Amman and an agreement with

Instead of slowing down the pace of negotiations, we should speed it up the PLO are realities that can scarcely be believed.

WE have come a long way from being internationally isolated, from being hated, from relying solely on American charity. Today we have ties with most countries in the world, and with organizations in the region. The economic boycott has largely been lifted.

But we are in mid-process, and things are very fragile. And even once we have a comprehensive peace with all the Arab states, things will remain fragile.

Long-standing hostility doesn't disappear with the signing of a document. It could take decades for peace to penetrate people's hearts. And the beginning is difficult. It's crucial, fateful.

It would be so easy to slide backwards, to revert to our former state of isolation, of being removed from the world, of leaning on the US, of sinking into self-righteousness, of tearing up UN resolutions, and being forced to fight a war every 10 years or so, sacrificing the best of our young.

This we must not do. So we will grit our teeth, bury our dead, heal our wounded, and demand that the Palestinian Authority put up a determined struggle against the terrorists of Hamas and the Islamic Jihad.

We must recognize that no one has a miracle cure for blind terror, and we must speed up the talks toward a final settlement between us and the Palestinians.

That settlement is attainable if both sides are willing to arrive at it. And both know the format.

Its big advantage will be determining the border between us and the Palestinians; the finality of it will do much to reduce the incentive to violence of extremists on both sides.

Instead, therefore, of severing contact, we should intensify it. Instead of slowing down the negotiations, we should speed them up.

Terror, fanaticism and dulling of the senses must not be allowed to win out. This is the time for a coalition of the sane to talk to each other and come up with ways to live a better life in this hate-filled and blood-saturated part of the world.

The writer is a contender for the Labor party leadership.

Yes, aren't dreams lovely?

Where's peace?

A Jordanian soldier mows down seven Israeli children on a school outing. True, every society, including Israel, has its lone madmen. But there seem to be a lot of "lone madmen" over there in Jordan.

A squadron of police has to shield the house of the killer's relatives from throngs of exhilarated admirers. The entire parliamentary opposition expresses warm support for the deed of mass child murder.

A suicide bomber blows up a cafe in Tel Aviv, killing and injuring civilians. News of the event is received with wild enthusiasm by thousands in rallies at Khan Yunis and Nabulus. Riots in Hebron intensify, amid chants of praise for the bomber's organization, Hamas.

Against this background, do the Israeli supporters of "peace" continue pushing the same old line? Remarkably, they do.

Yossi Beilin, architect of Oslo and a Labor contestant for prime minister, writes on this page that "it is precisely completion of the process that will deal the hardest blow to terror, perhaps the death blow."

In other words: There haven't been enough concessions. Once we give the Palestinians enough land and power, the terror and military apparatus that they're building by the day will turn into a softball club.

Zionism is a movement to reconstitute the Jewish people in Zion, the Land of Israel, not in Switzerland, Belgium, or Ohio. But this stretch of land that is the only true Jewish home happens also to be surrounded by backward, chauvinist dictatorships to whom a non-Moslem state in their midst is an existential affront.

For Zionism to work, we have to have our feet on the ground of Zion, and to be able to look clearly at the Middle Eastern reality around us. We need to see that the landscape is a harsh and stony one.

This is not a counsel of despair. Clear-sightedness includes discerning Arab moderation when it is shown by leaders like Anwar Sadat and King Hussein, and dealing with it profitably, even if the moderation stems from expediency rather than a genuine desire for accommodation.

But it also means realizing that — unpalatable though it may be — all possible evidence points to an abiding hatred of Israel among large parts of our neighbors' elite and populace, including the Palestinian Authority, and to their belief that the worst barbaric acts against Israelis are not only justified, but admirable.

IN recent years, a part of the

But we live in a harsh and hostile region, and we'd be better off facing it

Israeli population that is the least rooted in Jewish tradition and in Zion, and the most desirous of aping American and European way of life, has become dangerously disconnected from this reality.

It is one thing to want to live by American and European values; quite another to believe one can remake the Middle East to suit them.

The previous government was largely composed of, and supported by, Israelis with this mind-set, and it performed a curious psychological trick. It decided that the locus of irrationality and brutality was its Jewish opposition, whereas the Arabs were reasonable people who just had a few grievances.

The Rabin-Peres government did not stop at projecting this supposed Arab reasonableness onto two of the worst Arab killers and torturers, Yasser Arafat and Hafez Assad — hence the Oslo agreement with the Palestinians and the talks with the Syrians — seeking fervently to transfer land to their control.

Today, rationally speaking, not a single loophole or excuse is left for those who claim that the PA is peace-oriented. The chief of staff and head of military intelligence have confirmed it.

Arafat has encouraged Hamas terror; he has stopped doing anything to thwart it; and his own security chief, Jibril Rajoub, organized the riots in Hebron.

Anyone who still calls this a peace process is living in fairyland. Living in Zion can never be easy, but we make it much harder by persuading ourselves that our neighbors can be bribed out of their animosity toward us.

The present government was elected because most Israelis perceived it as more Zionist — both more rooted in Zion and more realistic — than the previous one. It has shown more realism, but not much resolve in acting on it.

Therefore, the government's declaration that further dealing with the Palestinians will depend on their really cracking down on terror must be regarded with skepticism, until proved.

It takes great resolve to cope with the problems we face. But if we want to live in Zion, it helps if we love it. If we merely regard the region as a war zone and try to turn it into a Western Europe, we only make it more unstable and more violent.

If, however, we see Oslo for what it is — an inevitable collision course — we might be able to plan a forward strategy rooted in realism and good sense.

POSTSCRIPT

COURTNEY BESWICK couldn't see his assailant, but the blind man used his martial arts training to flip the attacker over his shoulder and place him in a wrestling hold. The would-be robber suffered a neck injury and died.

Philadelphia police say charges probably won't be filed because Beswick acted in self defense. Neighbors say the dead man had bullied Beswick, 23 and blind since birth.

"Courtney said he asked the guy to leave him alone more than once," a neighbor said. "He told the guy that he wasn't giving him his money, but the man kept bothering him."

The thief, Anthony Ervin, had been arrested eight times in the last nine years on assorted robbery, weapons and assault charges. Ervin kept fighting after Beswick threw him over his shoulder, so he put him in a wrestling hold.

"Beswick's not a killer," the neighbor said. "He and his mother told me they even said a prayer for the guy."

Fit for the job

A. DAVID MARKS

In the latest development in the controversy over whether senior civil servants should submit to lie-detector tests, the High Court has given new Attorney-General Elyakim Rubinstein 10 days to declare either that he is ready to take the lie-detector test, or if he isn't, to suspend its use altogether in the civil service.

The state comptroller recently came out in favor of the polygraph test, applied together with other measures, for officials exposed to classified material. To my mind, this was misguided.

The absurd fact in this case is that polygraph results have been shown to be truest when those being tested are unsophisticated individuals who don't know how the test works, and cannot "fool" it. Clearly we are not talking about such people here.

The polygraph test itself is a relatively crude tool, undermining the candidate's established competence, his earned reputation for high integrity, and the prestige already conferred on him, making all of these subservient to the test's results.

The perceived need to submit senior appointees to such testing seems to be saying, chillingly, that our society lacks faith in other time-honored and more reliable methods of determining a candidate's suitability for a given position — such as, for example, having him appear before one or more truly distinguished committees.

If, after all, we cannot manage to trust a person who is a valued "known quantity," what does this say about our wider society? Have mistrust and dishonesty become the norm? And if they have, can such a flawed society be expected to produce persons of high integrity in the first place?

Applying the lie detector test to public servants prior to their assumption of office is tantamount to suspecting them wrongdoing. In other words, a successful test result will "clear" their good name, ridiculous as it sounds.

Reputed to be "very accurate," the lie-detector is not infallible. Indeed, results depend very largely on the skill of the person who interprets them. This means that, whatever other accompanying examinations there may be, a candidate could emerge with an undeserved stain on his character.

Whatever happened to the notion that a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty?

There are other potential problems with administering lie-detector tests to individuals who don't fit the norm — which may include those of outstanding ability, who, by definition, are "different."

In the most positive sense, such persons are in some ways "abnormal." Their level of intellectual honesty will probably be considerably higher than others'; certainly it will be more complex.

This could cause test responses to be different than anticipated. And, as noted, where lie-detector results are concerned, interpretation is all, or nearly all. Suppose the (often anonymous) tester lacks the skill to interpret correctly what he sees? What channels of appeal are there afterwards?

If polygraph testing is mandatory for senior civil service posts, why stop there? What about lie-detector tests for would-be MKs? Does anyone think their integrity is beyond doubt?

If all those wanting to run for the Knesset were compelled to take a lie-detector test to certify them as "kosher," the Israeli voter might be spared considerable anguish, since many candidates might decide to play safe and weed themselves out before they start. And the caliber of our political establishment might rise substantially.

And while we're at it, what about our Palestinian partners for peace? Could there be a better confidence-building measure, one more designed to promote mutual trust, than polygraphs all round?

If the attorney-general ultimately decides, or feels he has now been compelled, to submit himself to a lie-detector test to prove he is the man for the job, let's not restrict the test to high-ups in the civil service.

Let's institute polygraphs as a feature of every job where trust is a factor, with annual "checkups" to prevent backsliding.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

FLAWED RECOMMENDATIONS

Sir — While Michael Oren's suggestion that the peace process be frozen ("Freeze the process for now," March 23) is welcomed, his subsequent recommendations are fundamentally flawed.

Mr. Oren advocates keeping the peace talks frozen until the "Palestinians eschew in writing all use of violence, or threat of violence, in negotiations," and until there is a "demonstrable crack-down on Hamas." Unfortunately, we have been there and done that. Arafat, from the September 1993 signing of the Declaration of Principles to the recent Hebron agreement, has reiterated his pledge to eschew violence. Moreover, there have been a myriad of demonstrable crack-downs on Hamas by the PA. However, neither Arafat's promises nor his demonstrations of controlling Hamas have proven effective.

Equally flawed is Mr. Oren's long-term strategy of holding Camp David-style negotiations with the participation of King Hussein, President Mubarak, and Shimon Peres. I shudder to think what the outcome of such a summit would be as the politically pliable Netanyahu faces the combined pressures from all these men to make far-reaching concessions.

Mr. Oren is wrong to think that the presence of Peres in the government would "greatly contribute to Israel's ability to withstand international pressure." It is much more likely that Peres would be the source of these pressures.

Though well-intentioned, none of Mr. Oren's suggestions will improve the current, or long-term, security problems of Israel. The reason is that the Palestinians, as a society, have not given up their desire to regain all of historic Palestine. Over 40 percent of Palestinians favor terrorism against Israel and almost 60 percent have not given up their demand for a "right of return." That is hardly a prescription for peaceful resolution.

Finally, in an era in which the peoples of Eastern Europe are overthrowing tyrants, the Palestinians embrace Arafat. It is instructive to note that Arafat's opposition comes from those elements who do not consider him radical enough. Until the Palestinians inculcate the notion of a peaceful settlement and select a leader who pursues such a policy, a peaceful resolution of the conflict is impossible. Clearly, the present time is not propitious for such a resolution.

IMMIGRANT DENTISTS

Sir — There seems to be discrimination against immigrant dentists.

The dental licensing exam preparatory course is arduous and lengthy, and the first-time pass-rate is an absurd 5 percent. Many Russian immigrants have retaken it innumerable times without success. Dentists from the US, UK, France and South Africa fare no better. The money raised for the examining administration from the thousands of desperate exam retakes are not insubstantial.

Whilst aware that there is a glut of dentists in Israel, I feel it is still inhumanly unfair and against natural justice to deny even highly qualified dentists with many years of experience the right to practice. Why is it that immigrant medical physicians with 14 years of experience are exempted from their licensing exam, but not dentists, even with 35 years of experience? A self-serving paternalistic clique of dental examiners, whose main interest is their position, irrespective of the hardship and lack of livelihood they cause, is merely a reflection of some modern Israeli attitudes to professionals among immigrants and minorities.

HANAN ASHRAWI

Sir — The late Yitzhak Rabin, looking forward to an era of peace with the Palestinian Authority, used to say that Israel would be safer in such a time than it ever had been. That, of course, was a classic sample of the wishful thinking that underlay the Oslo process in general, but it convinced many people, and the PA did nothing to discourage that.

Now, Hanan Ashrawi has announced on CNN, after the Purim outrage, that "the Israelis are mistaken in thinking that Palestinians are their policemen"; Rabin, among others, was mistaken.

But she is wrong, of course. Nations at peace are indeed obligated to protect their neighbors. If the PA, of which Ms. Ashrawi is an official, really believes that it has no obligation to make good-faith efforts to prevent terrorist attacks on women, children, and other coffee-shop patrons, may release murderers to renew their mayhem and may put off renouncing their hate of Israel "until Israel has a constitution," it may be in for a jarring surprise. It may yet have cause to look back longingly on a day when a Jewish housing project seemed a big problem.

Feminists advance by the Book

A new role for Orthodox women is being forged, but rabbinic decisions are not keeping pace, Judy Weil reports women as teachers in specific areas of Halacha, such as the laws of family purity. Bar-Ilan University and Ohr Torah Institute's Toshiya program train and certify women as advocates for Israel's religious courts. In recent years, women have risen to increasingly important leadership positions in Orthodox synagogues, including the once male-dominated office of president.

A handful of rabbis attended a 1986 conference in Israel on women in Jewish law. The New York conference, however, attracted over 30 Orthodox rabbis; the organizers said they realized that rabbis had to be their partners in effecting change.

Shakdiel argued, however, that rabbis had too much of a forum and that the women were not prominent enough at the 1986 conference.

RABBIS WERE also criticized over the issue of agunot. Naomi Klass, a former aguna, spoke of her ex-husband's extortion and harassment.

She also recounted the story of another aguna who yielded to the rabbinical court's pressure to pay her husband $120,000 to release her. At the Jewish divorce ceremony, however, he handed it over to one of his confederates who then took off with the money. She remains married against her will to this day.

Special rabbinical courts have been set up in the US and Israel to deal solely with the issue of agunot.

"Although we appreciate these efforts on behalf of agunot of absent husbands," Rabbi Sivan of the Israel Women's Network says, "this [Israeli] court still does not answer the question of thousands of agunot chained by recalcitrant husbands."

Solving the problem may just be a question of methodology, says Rabbi Berman.

"Some aguna organizations believe that a total revocation of Torah marriage and divorce is in order, but the system is not subject to revocation. By using the smaller tools of Halacha, we don't have to throw out the baby with the bathwater."

Rabbi Dr. Noam Zohar, senior lecturer in philosophy at Bar-Ilan University, has praise for the advances made, but "I don't think compromises and patchwork will work. Rather, there's a system-wide problem of equality. We have to be committed to change across the board."

Blu Greenberg's now famous aphorism, "Where there's a rabbinic will, there's a halachic way," was widely quoted in the sessions. Yet the rabbinic will apparently is lagging far behind these women.

Weiss - who have been the source of hope for this movement - is contradictory, disturbing and downright offensive."

ONE PARTICIPANT had decided not to wait. Haviva Ner-David, studying at Jerusalem's Shalom Hartman Institute, created a storm recently when she announced her plans to seek ordination from an Orthodox rabbi in Jerusalem. She has already taken upon herself the commandments of wearing tallit, tzitzit and tzitzit.

"I wish her much success," says Leah Shakdiel, whose petition to the High Court of Justice won her a seat on the Yeroham Religious Council in 1986, and led to other women being appointed to councils nationwide. "Anyone who is the first has to have a hard time." It took four years for Shakdiel to take the seat after her nomination.

Other women sidestepped the question or said her plans would not help their cause.

Ner-David, who on Monday will be on the panel discussing the conference, is undaunted.

"Some of the women at the conference were skeptical, but then they didn't seem to want to be doing it themselves. I want to be and am a spiritually, religious guide for people. If women are doing the same studying as men, then I'm going to jump at the chance and I hope other women will join me. Someone has to want to be first."

Women have other options as well.

The Drisha Institute in New York and Nishmat in Jerusalem offer programs that qualify

The only point of disagreement on women's learning was that it was not emphasized enough at the conference. "I didn't come for the feminism issue," Debbie Kram, director of Boston's Maayan Institute, said. "I came for the learning, and if learning makes me a feminist, then I guess I am one."

But better education may be a dead end for women without the chance to serve in leadership roles, like rabbi or posek (halachic arbiter).

Orthodox feminism may sound like an oxymoron.

"Yet clearly," Shalvi says, "there are now women teachers, experts, who are capable of being poskot. That is important for Orthodox women to see, that rabbis are equal, if not often outdone by women."

When Blu Greenberg repeated her prediction that there would soon be Orthodox women rabbis, Rabbi David Silber of Drisha, a women's yeshiva in New York, suggested that until Orthodox accepts women in this role, the role of the rabbi should be creatively redefined to allow women to hold other positions of authority in the religious community. Other rabbis urged caution to avoid hurting other gains.

Shalvi took exception: "To be told not to go too far, to hear it from so-called moderates like Avi hibit women's prayer groups there in response to a local family's desire to mark their daughter's bat mitzva with a Torah reading in such a group.

The family ignored the council's ruling, citing the legitimization other Orthodox rabbis have given women's prayer.

Orthodox rabbis in basic sympathy with the women's goals attended as conferees or speakers. Among them were activist Rabbi Avi Weiss, whom the prayer movement consults on points of Halacha, and Stiem College professor Rabbi Saul Berman, head of Edah, a modern-Orthodox think tank which was a sponsor of the conference. They argued, however, that women's prayer groups should not fight now for the right to recite those prayers long restricted to a minyan of men.

In contrast, Rabbi Irving Greenberg - known for his advocacy of pluralism and dialogue with the non-Orthodox movements - suggested that with a new generation of poskim, women's prayer groups might be recognized as true liturgical communities with the right to recite their prayers as a quorum.

BETTER EDUCATION is another area of change. Since Talmud study was introduced for girls in the 1970s, women's yeshivot have proliferated, among them Midreshet Lindenbaum and Matan.

Alice Shalvi, head of the Israel Women's Network, said one of the more exciting aspects of the conference was how many "extremely knowledgeable women" attended, running the learning sessions.

More than two decades after Conservative and Reform feminists began transforming their Judaism, Orthodox women from around the world met last month to assess the strides they had made in their own quiet revolution and to chart their future.

"The time was ripe for change," says Blu Greenberg, chairwoman of the International Conference on Feminism and Orthodoxy. "By the turnout alone, which far surpassed our expectations, we understand that we tapped in to a great need."

"There were many women, many rabbis and many groups working on these issues in isolation. It was a very empowering experience for all of us to come together."

Conference participants will assess what the event accomplished at a panel discussion on Monday at Jerusalem's Pardes Institute of Jewish Studies.

Orthodox feminism may sound like an oxymoron, but the issues it addresses are of tremendous importance, from changing roles in the community to resolving the plight of agunot (women unable to obtain divorces).

The term still engenders discomfort among some women, including conference organizers. "Some of the organizers were hesitant to use 'feminism' in the title for fear that it would raise a red flag," Greenberg said after the conference. "But others among us said: 'If we can't use 'feminism' in the title, then we're still at square one. Why bother to organize a conference?'"

The title did not deter women from attending; about 1,000 - more than double the number anticipated - came from Israel, the US, Canada, England, the Netherlands, South Africa and Australia.

The most significant changes have been in the last 15 years, among them women's prayer groups, which now have thousands of members worldwide. A Queens, New York, rabbinical council voted in January to pro-military choice in the Book-of-the-Month Club in the US and the History Book Club in Britain. Yet another laurel leaf is on the way. Another Herzog book, The War of Atonement, which was a best-seller when it was first published 23 years ago, will also be republished within the next few months.

ASHKENAZI CHIEF Rabbi Yisrael Meir Lau - criticized by Ha'aretz this week for accepting money for officiating at weddings - hinted that some of these tokens of appreciation find their way to charitable enterprises.

His elder brother, Naftali Lavie, who has often acted as the intermediary bringing needy causes to the chief rabbi's attention, is more specific. He says he knows of at least a hundred cases in which Lau made funds available to economically deprived young couples so that they could have a wedding reception and buy the basics for their first home. Lau was also one of the people who helped finance the good deeds of the late Simcha Holtzberg on behalf of disabled soldiers.

Appel of his eye

By GREEN FAY CASHMAN

Purim has always been a good reason for a party, but Likud activist, building contractor and businessman David Appel had an additional cause for celebration - his acquittal at the end of a seven-year trial on charges of theft and fraud.

Among the thousand-plus merry-makers at Tel Aviv's Gan Oranin on Saturday night was Shas MK Aryeh Deri, whose own drawn-out trial is still in progress. Foreign Minister David Levy, Interior Minister Eli Shaisa, Knesset Speaker Dan Tichon, Likud MKs Shaul Amos, Ruby Rivlin and Silvan Shalom, former government ministers Sarah Doron and Yoram Aridor, numerous members of the legal fraternity, including Bar Association chairman Dror Hoter-Yishai and Constitution advocate Uriel Reichman, and celebrity model Sapir Kaufman with her husband Yoav Papushado. Also present was Ori Oren, Israel's former consul in Los Angeles, who was passing through en route to South Africa where he will take up the post of ambassador.

ALTHOUGH HIS fondness for public transport has been well publicized, MK Benny Begin still arouses curiosity when he's seen boarding or alighting from a bus. He just didn't develop a taste for cars during his brief stint as science minister.

ISRAEL'S SIXTH president Chaim Herzog, whose most recent book Living History has already entered its third printing in the US, while Battle of the Bible, a military history book he wrote together with Prof. Mordechai Gichon of Tel Aviv University, has been republished by Greenhill Books. The latter has been selected as the book of the month for the month of March in the US. Herzog's book is a collection of his personal experiences and observations during his tenure as president of Israel. It is a well-written and informative book that provides a unique insight into the life of the president of Israel.

Girls' soccer about to kick off in Israel

By RUTH MASON

We made aliyah last year from North America with three girls, ages six, nine and 10. Each of them played soccer on an organized team that was part of a league that in turn was part of the national American Youth Soccer Organization. My girls love playing soccer and we were sure that in Israel, where soccer is the national sport, we would have no trouble finding a team for them.

Imagine our daughters' disappointment when all our efforts failed. Why is there no girls' soccer in Israel?

Shlomit Toor-Nir, director, Unit for the Advancement of Women in Sports of the Sports Authority of the Ministry of Education, Culture and Sport, says:

You've come to Israel at the right time! We are a very traditional, conservative society. Until now, soccer was considered a boys' sport, something that just wasn't for girls. Now there is an awakening on the part of girls and also on the part of FIFA, the International Football Association (soccer is known as football in Israel). They recently sent an announcement to all national member organizations, including Israel, asking them to start leagues for women.

My feeling is that we should start with girls and then move on to women. The Ministry of Education has begun organizing a base for this in schools and community centers throughout the country. We have asked them to organize karate games for girls. This is like soccer, but it's played indoors and with five or seven instead of 11 players. The idea is that we will find those who excel and recruit them onto municipal teams of girls' soccer. Haifa and its suburbs already have 15 girls' karate groups which will play in a league, beginning soon.

We are simultaneously trying to build a national girls' team within the national football organization. Our efforts in this area are just beginning.

Sports in Israel is still very male-dominated. Of those involved in competitive sports, only 22% are women as compared with a country like Norway, where women's participation is up to 40 percent.

Soccer is thought of as an extremely male sport. If we can change this image, we'll have taken a big step forward.

Prudential buys Scottish Amicable for £2.8b.

The Scottish Amicable Life Assurance Society said yesterday it will sell out to Prudential Corp. PLC, Britain's largest life insurer, in a deal worth £2.8 billion. Prudential beat out two rival bidders from the British banking group Abbey National PLC and Prudential Mutual Provident, Australia's largest insurer. Prudential said it will make cash payments and offer insurance policy benefits worth £1.5b. to 1.1 million policy holders who are owners of Scottish Amicable. There are another 100,000 policy holders who have no ownership stake in Scottish Amicable. AP

New Zealand privatizes water affairs

The joint venture, the Papanui District Council, a stormy protest at the council, voted 11-2 to accept joint venture United Water's bid for $10 million to buy the right to run its water system. Opponents say the move to award the franchise to United, a joint venture of Compagnie Generale des Eaux and Thames Water, will increase ratepayers' bills. ECB replaces oil, economics ministers

The Arab Emirates President Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan Al Nahyan presented a new cabinet yesterday, naming new oil and economics ministers but keeping other major posts unchanged. The new cabinet is believed to have wanted to bring new members to the cabinet, which had not significantly changed in seven years, but no major changes were expected from either appointments or policies. AP

The United Arab Emirates is made up of seven small sheikhdoms on the southwest corner of the Arabian Peninsula. They are Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Ras al-Khaimah, Ajman, Umm al-Qaiwain and Fujairah. The new cabinet was appointed after consultations with the leaders of all the emirates. Japan dock workers strike

Seeking better working conditions, Japan's largest dockworkers' union has decided to go on strike during nighttime hours, a union official said yesterday. The National Council of Dockworkers' Unions of Japan, which has 50,000 members, will refuse to load or unload cargo from 6 p.m. until 8 a.m. beginning next Monday, union official Masaya Tamada said. The work stoppage will affect the country's six largest ports, including those at Yokohama, Kobe and Osaka, as well as about half of Japan's 46 ports nationwide, Tamada said. AP

ECI wins $58 million contract with BT

By JENNIFER FRIEDLIN

ECI Telecom Ltd. of Petah Tikva has received a $58 million, three-year contract to supply telecommunications equipment to British Telecom.

According to the terms of the agreement, ECI will supply BT with DACS-2 systems.

The system allows telecom carriers to double the number of lines per telephone line by converting single analog line into two digital lines while leaving the current infrastructure in place.

ECI competed with several telecommunications companies for the bid, which represents one of ECI's largest deals with BT.

One of the key elements of this contract is that it gives us a multi-year contract with a major carrier," said Doron Inbar, the company's chief financial officer.

The firm is British Telecom's sole supplier of HDLS equipment, which works on a different part of the telephone line than the DACS-2, but also serves to increase the number of users that can be served through a pair of existing copper-wire telephone lines.

ECI, which is expanding its marketing efforts in the Far East, is currently working on a deal to supply $45m. worth of networking equipment to Chinese telecom operator Ji Tong.

Based in Petah Tikva, ECI manufactures digital telecommunications equipment for the transmission infrastructure of domestic and international telecommunications networks.

Row over spin-off bonuses for Bank Leumi chiefs

FM Levy demands legislation forbidding public companies from granting excessive bonuses

By DAVID HARRIS and GALIT LIPKIS BECK

Bank Leumi chairman Eitan Raff and general manager Galia Maor should refuse to accept the combined NIS 1.2 million bonuses promised them earlier this month for the spin-off deals they led involving the Africa Israel holding company, MKs representing a broad political spectrum said yesterday.

Foreign Minister David Levy said he will request in the next cabinet meeting that legislation be drafted to forbid public companies from granting excessive bonuses.

The bonuses to Raff and Maor are unacceptable, according to Knesset Finance Committee chairman Avraham Ravitz (United Torah Judaism).

Former finance minister Avraham Shohat, head of the Labor faction in the committee, said that as rational and intelligent people the two should refuse to accept the money.

"Bonuses should only be paid for a prolonged period of success, not on the basis of one deal," said Silvan Shalom (Likud). "Whether they should refuse to accept the money is for the company board to decide."

Support for the payment came from Zvi Hendel (NRP), who argued the two were responsible for the sale, which brought the company NIS 455m. "A NIS 600,000 bonus is not that great a percentage."

Bank Leumi yesterday justified the high bonuses allocated to its senior management, emphasizing that the transaction will bring in high tax returns and new foreign money into the economy.

"The sale was completed at the maximum price, reaping the highest profit to the government, which represents the shareholders. It is one of the largest transactions ever concluded."

The bank's general shareholders meeting is convening on April 1 to approve the bonuses. Bank Leumi does not expect any objections.

The major portion of the Africa-Israel sale was that of Migdal Insurance to Italian-based Assicurazioni Generali, one of Europe's largest insurers, in a deal worth more than NIS 300m.

That deal is still shrouded in controversy, as more than 50 families are embroiled in a legal battle with Generali to be paid out on life and other insurance policies of Holocaust victims.

With Generali refusing to pay, Ravitz yesterday demanded the bank set up a fund for the families, claiming the profits from the deal should at least in part go their way.

The Generali issue is expected to be discussed by the committee early next month, but Finance Minister Dan Meridor is refusing to appear, despite Ravitz's request. According to the minister, he has no authority to act in the matter, with the sole government power belonging to Insurance Commissioner Doron Shorer. However, Shorer also maintains he has no legal grounds to intervene. Meridor said the law also prevents him from commenting on the bonuses.

Last week the Bank of Israel decided Raff could not be appointed to head Generali in Israel, while still running a state firm.

MKs Michael Kleiner (Likud-Gesher), Avraham Herschson (Likud) and Nissim Dahan (Shas) have said they will vote against the Treasury in the finance committee until something is done to help the families.

Kleiner said yesterday he intends looking into the possibility that Raff rushed the Generali deal through in order to make personal financial gain.

"At first I didn't realize why he [Raff] was so quiet about the whole deal, despite being part of an organization originally set up by the Jewish Agency," said Kleiner. "Now it's clear that standing behind this shady deal is someone who expects to gain a fat bonus."

Migdal rejects demand to dismiss managers

By GALIT LIPKIS BECK

The directors of Migdal Insurance yesterday rejected Supervisor of Insurance Doron Shorer's demand to dismiss managers recently indicted for creating a cartel.

The directors of Clal Insurance are expected to decide on the issue next week.

Migdal's board of directors convened yesterday at Shorer's instruction to decide on the continued employment of the managers convicted of price-fixing and other illegal activities in restraint of trade in 1991 and 1992.

Migdal board of directors expressed their full confidence in the continued employment of Migdal Group general manager Uzi Levi, Migdal deputy general manager Gideon Rosolio and Hamagen deputy general manager Amichai Harari at the end of a lengthy meeting.

But the directors did not come to a final decision on the managers' future employment with the country's largest insurance group.

"They contributed and made big contributions to the success and prosperity of the Migdal Group," said the board in an official announcement. "The board is under the opinion not to accept the supervisor of insurance's demand..."

The Italian Generali will officially gain control of Migdal from Bank Leumi at the start of April.

Shortly afterwards, on April 17, the company's general shareholders are scheduled to convene to appoint a new board of directors, who will decide on the managers' future employment.

"It is not appropriate for the existing board to make such a significant long-term decision on an issue which must be discussed by the new board," the board of directors said.

Generali is expected to support Levi's continued employment, sources close to the company said.

They said Generali acquired Migdal with Levi, who has more than 50 years of experience in the sector.

The future employment of Clal Insurance general manager Rimmon Ben-Shaul will be decided at a board of directors meeting only after the board examines the legal opinions on the issue in more detail, a Clal official announced at the end of a three-hour directors meeting at which Shorer's demand was discussed.

"The directors want to examine the legal opinions in more detail; there are many aspects that must be considered," a Clal spokesman said.

Shorer could not be reached for comment.

Published reports said he intends to use his power to suspend the general managers and their deputies for three months on the basis that they are no longer credible and suitable for the positions.

The supervisor of insurance has the authority to suspend managers under section 68 of the Insurance Business Superintendence Law.

Boeing lands $685 million deal with Air China

A cyclist glances at an Air China advertisement featuring a Boeing 747 in Beijing yesterday. Boeing has landed a $685 million contract with Air China to buy five 777-200 jetliners in an indication that business relations have recovered since a year ago, when Beijing turned to a European rival for its aircraft purchases. COMPANY RESULTS

Bezeq earns record NIS 658m.

By JUDY SIEGEL and JENNIFER FRIEDLIN

Bezeq earned a record NIS 658.7 million in net income last year, a 5.2% increase over 1995.

The telecommunications company's figures were released yesterday and approved in financial statements by the Bezeq board of directors.

Net income during the fourth quarter rose to NIS 194.5m. from NIS 152.2m. during the previous quarter and NIS 176m. in the same period last year.

Annual revenues totalled NIS 8.287 billion, an increase of 4.7% over 1995.

Bezeq chairman Gurion Meltzer and acting director-general Avi Hochman told the board that a substantial chunk of revenue growth was due to increased volume of activity in cellular communications, an increase in the installation of regular phone lines and the sale of peripheral equipment.

All components of revenue, they said, were harmed by the erosion of telecommunications rates due to inflation.

Yet the growth in the volume of local and international calls offset the erosion of rates and also contributed to the growth in revenues.

Clal Insurance net earnings swelled 98 percent to NIS 119.68m. last year from NIS 60.48m. in 1995.

Fourth quarter net earnings rose 22% to NIS 26.7m. from NIS 21.9m. in the same 1995 period.

Net return on equity on an annual basis reached 28.6%. The higher earnings reflected an improvement in all fields of activity. Management said the annual results were partly offset by a cartel fine of NIS 6,000.

Earnings from the general insurance sector grew 22% to NIS 87.26m. compared with a net loss of NIS 21.94m. in the previous year.

The general insurance division reported a 73% drop in fourth quarter profit to NIS 1.02m. from NIS 3.08m.

In the life insurance sector, profits grew 28% to NIS 183.27m. from NIS 143.11m. Fourth quarter earnings increased 36% to NIS 55.59m. from NIS 40.81m.

Nexus Telecommunication Systems Ltd.'s net losses decreased slightly to $5.29m. from $6.17m. in 1995. Revenues rose 37% to $772,000.

Good Knight for Lakers

EAST RUTHERFORD (AP) — Rookie Travis Knight had 18 points and 14 rebounds and the Los Angeles Lakers avoided their first three-game losing streak of the season by beating the New Jersey Nets 109-84 in Monday night's only game.

The Lakers are 10-10 since Shaquille O'Neal injured his knee. The win moved them a half-game ahead of the Houston Rockets in the race for the third-best record in the Western Conference.

FIFA plan to widen Bosman transfer rule

ZURICH (AP) — FIFA is set to amend its rules so that players of all nationalities — so long as they play in the European Union — can move on free transfers under the Bosman regulations.

The move will bring stars such as Brazil's Ronaldo, Colombia's Faustino Asprilla and Nigeria's Nwankwo Kanu into line with players born in EU countries. Once the players are out of contract, the clubs they move to no longer have to pay a transfer fee.

The rule came into existence 15 months ago after Belgian soccer player Jean-Marc Bosman successfully gained a court ruling against his club, FC Liege, that it should not receive a transfer fee because his contract had ended.

India's Dalmiya to be new ICC chief

NEW DELHI (Reuters) — India's Jagmohan Dalmiya will be the next head of the International Cricket Council (ICC) for a three-year term after the retirement of Sir Clyde Walcott in June.

Dalmiya played a key role in organizing the World Cup jointly hosted by India, Pakistan and Sri Lanka last year. He has also been aggressively promoting the idea of commercial sponsorships for cricket and taking the game to more countries.

India were unanimously elected to provide the president until June 2000 at a special general meeting of the ICC on Sunday.

Ran loses in Casablanca

CASABLANCA, Morocco (AP) — Marcello Craca of Germany, defeated Eyal Ran, 6-4, 6-2 yesterday in the first round of the King Hassan II Open tennis tournament.

In other singles action, Gilbert Schaller (4), Austria, defeated Tamer El Sawy, Egypt 7-6(7-2), 6-3.

Moslems protest Israeli cricketers

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — More than 500 Moslems burned Israeli flags and chanted "crush Israel" yesterday to protest against an Israeli cricket team playing here.

The noisy two-hour demonstration was organized by the youth wing of an Islamic party, which demanded the government send back the sportsmen, the first Israelis to ever play in this Islamic nation.

The demonstrators from the opposition Parti Agama Se-Islam held banners that read, "Get out Israel, we hate you" and "Israelis Get Lost," and cheered their leaders who delivered anti-Israeli speeches.

Later, they marched through downtown Kuala Lumpur and delivered a protest letter at Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad's office.

"The ruling party and Mahathir claim they are Moslems ... This is a disgrace, letting Israelis ... into our nation ... We will fight to get them out," the party deputy president, Hadi Awang, said.

"This is only a warning to get them out. If it is not heeded by the government we will disrupt the games ... We will hunt the Israelis in every nook and corner and kick them out," said another leader, Abu Bakar Chik.

About 200 riot police sat in two trucks while about 20 other policemen mingled among the demonstrators, but there was no trouble.

The Israelis played their first match on Monday, Kenya, 157-3, defeated Israel 154-8 by seven wickets in the tournament of 22 non-Test playing nations.

play in a competition for the sport's top prize, the World Cup, in England in 1999.

Malaysia, a staunch supporter of the Palestinian cause, has no diplomatic relations with Israel, and bans interaction between its citizens. Malaysia, however, allowed the cricket team, saying it wanted to show Israel that it is possible for multicultural and multi-religious societies to live in harmony.

"The government has given its approval for the visit of the team and we do not intend to revoke it," Mahathir said.

Last year, Malaysia allowed select businessmen to visit Israel to express support for improving Israeli-Palestinian relations.

According to Reuters, Israel play Ireland today; Singapore tomorrow, the US on Saturday, and Gibraltar on Sunday.

Hap Petah Tikva fading away

By ORI LEWIS

Maccabi Herzliya appear to have assured themselves of another season in the National League after beating Hapoel Petah Tikva 1-0 in a postponed game held over from 11 days ago.

The Herzliyans came away from the Petah Tikva municipal ground which had been waterlogged on the original match day (March 15) with a win, following a sixth-minute goal by Roman Filipchuk. Walid Bdir was at fault as he made a defensive error to allow Filipchuk free rein, and the Herzliya forward made no mistake against Shai Hess.

The Petah Tikvans are fading badly in the league race for a place in Europe, and while their first-round performances kept them in the title picture, their drop from second to third place in the standings is a sign that they still have to gain much experience before they are ready to challenge for the major honors.

Herzliya closed up their defense after the goal, while Petah Tikva failed to capitalize on several opportunities to score. Bdir put the ball in the net on 11 minutes, but only after fouling Herzliya keeper Shuli Gilardi. In the second half, Avi Fletcher headed onto the crossbar and Motti Kakkon missed from a comfortable position.

Petah Tikva, whose poor performance prompted some supporters to call for coach Nir Levin's dismissal, are now in third place with 45 points from 23 matches, while Herzliya are in 12th spot with 26 points.

In a second division match held over from the same weekend and for the same reason, Hapoel Hadera and Bnei Tel Aviv drew 0-0.

In other news, the national junior (under-16) side take on Yugoslavia in the first leg of their final qualifier for the European championships today in Loznica. The return leg will be held in Israel on April 16.

Tal Banin returned to action as the national squad began its training camp for the all-important World Cup qualifier with Luxembourg on Monday.

Lofton, Justice swap wigwams

ATLANTA (AP) — The Braves and Indians pulled off a major trade today in which Atlanta sent outfielders David Justice and Marquis Grissom to Cleveland for outfielder Kenny Lofton and reliever Alan Embree.

The NL champion Braves were looking to trade the high-priced Justice to free room in their salary structure for re-signing pitchers Greg Maddux and Tom Glavine, both free agents at the end of the season. Justice, who missed nearly all of last season with a shoulder injury, will make $12.5 million over the next two seasons.

The Indians were facing the loss of Lofton, one of the game's top leadoff hitters, at the end of this season. The center fielder already had told the team he didn't want to talk about a contract extension and he planned to file for free agency following the 1997 season.

"This very significant deal brings us arguably the game's finest leadoff hitter in Kenny Lofton," Braves general manager John Schuerholz said.

"In addition, our bullpen is strengthened considerably by the acquisition of hard-throwing left-hander Alan Embree."

Lofton, 29, gives the Braves their best leadoff hitter since they traded Brett Butler more than a decade ago. He hit .317 with 14 homers, 67 RBIs and 17 stolen bases last season.

Grissom, also 29, led off for Atlanta the past two years and had one of his best seasons in 1996, hitting .308 with 23 homers, 74

RBIs and 28 stolen bases. However, his on-base percentage was only .349 and it was believed he would have been better suited at a lower spot in the batting order.

Justice, 30, separated a shoulder on May 15 and missed the rest of the season. However, he seemed to have no lingering effects of the injury when he returned to the lineup this spring.

Embree, 27, was "clearly a throw-in to the trade, but he does fill a need on the Braves staff. Atlanta had been seeking another left-hander to go with Kevin Rogers in the bullpen, allowing Terrell Wade to remain the fifth starter. Embree split time last season between the Indians and Triple-A Buffalo, going 1-1 with a 6.39 ERA in 24 games with the Indians.

Liverpool keep in touch with Utd

LONDON (Reuters) — Liverpool closed to within three points of Premier League leaders Manchester United on Monday with a controversial 2-1 win at third-placed Arsenal.

The relegation battle between Middlesbrough and Nottingham Forest ended 1-1.

The first half at Highbury was a high-speed affair with little time on the ball for either side.

Liverpool's Stan Collymore missed three decent chances while Dennis Bergkamp blazed over for Arsenal.

But five minutes into the second half Collymore was presented with an unmissable opportunity when David Seaman failed to hold a shot by Stig Inge Bjornebye.

Seaman, playing his first game after nearly two months out injured, was heavily involved in the second Liverpool goal in the 65th minute. He was penalized for bringing down Robbie Fowler in the box — despite the Liverpool player doing his best to convince the referee that there was no contact.

Seaman then saved Fowler's poorly-struck penalty — only for Jason McAteer to bang in the rebound.

Ian Wright pulled one back 12 minutes from time but it was too late for Arsenal who stayed six points behind United from a game more.

Liverpool manager Roy Evans said he thought his side deserved to win a "very competitive game ... it's a tough place to come and win," he said.

Gretzky leads Rangers past Penguins

NEW YORK (Reuters) — Wayne Gretzky had a goal and an assist in what probably was his final regular-season meeting with Mario Lemieux as the New York Rangers blanked the reeling Pittsburgh Penguins 3-0 Monday.

Gretzky scored into an empty net in the final minute of the third period after setting up the first goal of the game early in the first.

Lemieux, bothered by persistent back pain and still recovering from treatment for Hodgkin's disease, has said this almost certainly will be his final year in the NHL.

"If Mario had stayed healthy he would have broken my records, especially the one where I got 92 goals in one season," said Gretzky. "He also was capable of getting more than my 162 assists."

Gretzky and Lemieux, the premier players of their era, faced each other 25 times during the regular season. Gretzky's teams went 17-7-1 and he outscored Lemieux in those games, 60 points to 38.

Gretzky in 18 seasons has amassed 61 scoring records. Lemieux in 12 seasons has 13 scoring records.

Lemieux said, "I am at peace with my place in the game's history."

CRITIC'S CHOICE

CLASSICAL MUSIC

MICHAEL AJZENSTADT

Straight from winning a Grammy in New York, Russian-born Israeli pianist Yefim Bronfman returns to play with the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra. Tonight at Jerusalem's ICC and Thursday, Sunday and Monday at the Mann Auditorium in Tel Aviv, Bronfman plays Brahms's first piano concerto to while Mevdi Rodan leads the orchestra in Stravinsky's Firebird and Ani Ma'ayani's Sinfonietta on Jewish Themes (8:30 except Sunday at 7). On Saturday (9) at the Mann Auditorium in Tel Aviv, Bronfman plays Beethoven's first piano concerto while Mordechai Rechtman leads the orchestra in Mozart's 36th symphony and his own arrangements of Bach organ works performed by woodwinds.

Harvey Bordowitz leads his Herzliya Chamber Orchestra in Dvorak's Serenade and Vaughan Williams' Fantasia on a Theme by Tallis, while percussionist extraordinaire Chen Zimbalista, playing marimba and vibraphone performs, the marimba concerto by Rosau, and Possession for marimba, vibraphone and strings by Prado. Tonight at the Holiday Inn Crown Plaza hotel in Herzliya, and next Monday at the David Raziel Cultural Center in Netanya (8:30).

ENGLISH POETRY

HELEN KAYE

Poet Karen Alkalay-Gut will read her poems in Hebrew and English with pianist Liz Magnes, her long-time friend and collaborator, improvising her own signature style of jazz on the piano, in an evening titled Poetry and all that Jazz. Alkalay-Gut, whose prizes include the 1990 BBC World Poetry Award, is currently shortlisted for a major American literature prize. Her poems are wise and witty, evocative, sensual and accessible. Magnes, a composer as well as a performer, has an almost uncanny gift for tuning into the personality of her partner. Tonight at the Beit Lessin Theater, Tel Aviv at 9.

TELEVISION

ELANA CHIPMAN

A new comic miniseries by the BBC airs tonight on Channel 1, at 11. Next of Kin, starring top-notch

Following his success at the IPO's 60th-anniversary concert, pianist Yefim Bronfman returns.

British actors Penelope Keith and William Gaunt, makes fun of a spoilt and selfish middle-aged couple who are suddenly saddled with three mischievous grandchildren who have become orphaned.

Isleagle is a documentary by Nizar Hassan which examines Israel's Arab minority, their feelings and their future. To them, Independence Day is a test. One schoolteacher says "Independence Day means nothing to me, but if the law requires that a flag be flown, I will be the first to do it." A schoolboy, on the other hand, only said he wished to burn the flag. Set your video for Channel 2, 2:30 a.m.

ADINA HOFFMAN

 FIERCE CREATURES — This all-out accurate spoof of corporate take-over culture is set in an English zoo, reunites the cast of A Fish Called Wanda, and works just as a follow-up comedy should: instead of confining the actors to repetition of a few tried-and-true stunts, the filmmakers trust in the ensemble's chemistry, and set them loose to try on new roles. The strength of both pictures lies in John Cleese's script — he wrote the new movie with film critic Ian Johnston — and in the actors' complementary personalities. While Fierce Creatures does seem a bit tamer than the first movie, it's also marked by flashes of mad inspiration. With Cleese, Kevin Kline, Jamie Lee Curtis and Michael Palin. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Parental guidance suggested.)
